

Choosing Your Baby's Doctor

Choosing your child's doctor can be fun and exciting. It can also create some concerns. You want to be sure your choice is a good one. Friends and relatives may offer suggestions. You may know a physician nearby, or look to us as an excellent resource. We not only know you and your family but work with physicians on staff at Rocky Mountain Children's Hospital at Presbyterian St. Luke's.

Plan to visit the physician you select for your child's care during your pregnancy. This is especially important if this is your first child or if you are new to the physician's practice. Physicians normally will schedule a "meet and greet" interview with new parents. You may want to interview a number of physicians before making your selection. Your choice should make you feel comfortable about your children visiting the doctor and assure you that communication will be open. The first visit should be the beginning of a long-term, supportive relationship.

Before your visit, decide what questions you want to ask. The following may serve as guidelines for the interview.

1. What is the doctor's training, competency, communication skills, approach to child rearing and routine for well-child care? Does the doctor have any specific "parenting philosophy" for moms and dads?
2. What is the doctor's primary hospital affiliation? If you choose a pediatrician who does not care for newborns at Presbyterian St. Luke's, your obstetrician can arrange for one of the neonatologists or pediatricians at one of these locations to care for your baby during his/her hospital stay.
3. How many partners, if any, does the doctor have? Are there other health care providers on staff, such as pediatric nurse practitioners or child health associates? How are patients assigned?
4. What are the office hours, and are there extended hours for working parents?
5. What is the policy and coverage for after-hours care telephone calls?
6. What hospital emergency department do they recommend?
7. If there are older siblings, will the physician care for them as well?
